Writing the Advertisement

1. Every advertisement should include the following:

- a lead sentence
- a brief description of the job
- who you are looking for

2. The lead sentence should be an active, strong sentence that will communicate, from the applicant's point of view, either how the employee will contribute or what they are likely to gain from taking the job. For example:

- "Give a new shape and focus to an important program while helping to improve the lives of Vermont's more vulnerable citizens."
- "Would you like to make a valuable contribution supporting and developing a statewide human resource/financial system?"

3. The brief description of the job should be written in plain language that will let the potential applicant recognize what the job is about and its basic functions. Less is more, so use only a few sentences.

4. Answer the question: "Who are you looking for?" This might be an abbreviated statement of the minimum qualifications, preferred qualifications or specific skills desired. One sentence should do it.
